CR 1.10:

U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is an independent, bipartisan agency first established by Congress in 1957 and reestablished in 1983. It is directed to:

- Investigate complaints alleging that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote by reason of their race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap, or national origin, or by reason of fraudulent practices;
- Study and collect information concerning legal developments constituting discrimination or a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution because of race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap, or national origin, or in the administration of justice;
- Appraise Federal laws and policies with respect to discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap, or national origin, or in the administration of justice;
- Serve as a national clearinghouse for information in respect to discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap, or national origin;
- Submit reports, findings, and recommendations to the President and Congress.

4. Community Housing Resource Boards 151

1. Introduction

One of the most important fair housing developments over the past 35 years has been the establishment and growth of hundreds of private fair housing groups across the country.

They began as a handful of volunteer "grassroots" organizations of persons who banded together to help racial minorities secure free housing choice. At the time these groups were established, there were virtually no laws—Federal, State, or local—that banned housing discrimination. Indeed, their initial efforts were aimed primarily at obtaining enactment of such laws, as well as using moral persuasion in the cause of fair housing. These groups had little in the way of funds, no professional staff, and had to rely on their own resources and knowledge, augmented when possible by assistance from civil rights and related organizations that generally had other, more pressing, priorities.

Over the years, the private fair housing groups have thrived, growing in sophistication and strength; many have gained stable funding and professional staffs that enable them to be a major force for fair housing in their communities. Further, other local civil rights and related groups not previously concerned with fair housing are now active in the field. Not coincidentally, the growth in importance of private fair housing groups occurred at the time governments were enacting laws against housing discrimination.

The range of services offered by private fair housing groups is now broad, extending beyond the "good neighbor" campaigns of 20 years ago that sought to provide a friendly welcome to minorities making "integrated moves." It includes counseling and referral services to assist whites and minorities, alike, in exercising free housing choice; investigations into possible illegal housing discrimination; assistance to housing discrimination victims in preparing and pursuing their cases through the administrative or judicial process; participating as plaintiffs in fair housing cases; and influencing key decisions by governmental authorities on the direction and scope of housing and community development programs.

This directory outlines the range of fair housing services offered by a wide variety of community-oriented fair housing organizations that provide one or more significant fair housing services. In addition to private organizations whose sole function is fair housing, the directory also includes other private organizations that provide some significant fair housing service or activity.

Every private fair housing center has its own program and priorities, depending on the local situation. But each of them provides one or more of the following services:

- Counseling persons who believe they have been subjected to housing discrimination

Counseling covers a range of activities. Some groups simply inform people of what their rights are and which official agencies can be turned to for further assistance. More specialized groups will talk with a potential client to help determine the specific facts and how the situation might be remedied. If the client is referred to an official agency or an attorney, a group representative may accompany the person there. At the very least, the group will maintain communication until the problem is resolved.

- Housing listing and referral service

Many fair housing groups acquire listings of available houses and apartments in racially integrated areas. They then make the information available to majority and minority families that want to live in such areas.

- Investigating complaints

Fair housing group representatives call the rental or sales agents alleged to have committed an act of discrimination, hear their version of the incident, and attempt to mediate a solution. If that effort is unsuccessful, the client is sent to an enforcement agency.

- Testing or auditing

Some groups take a more forceful approach to investigating possible instances of housing discrimination. Through testing[1] and auditing,[2] they

[1] In a test for racial discrimination, a pair of testers approaches, in sequence, the rental or real estate agent suspected of discrimination. One tester is black or other racial or ethnic minority, one white. Testers provide exactly the same information about themselves (income, age, family size, etc.) and ask for the same information (Is X apartment unit available? Could you show me available houses costing approximately Y?). If the two testers are given different information in response to these inquiries, it is strong evidence of discrimination. The same principles apply to tests for other kinds of discrimination.

"The use of testers has been accepted by courts, tacitly or expressly, as an effective means of obtaining evidence of discrimination." Grant v. Smith, 574 F.2d 252, 254 n.3 (5th Cir. 1978). Testers who are given misinformation on the basis of race have standing to sue under §804(d) of Title VIII. Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363 (1982). Evidence of the experience of checkers (testers) has been uniformly admitted by courts to show evidence of discrimination. Smith v. Anchor Building Corp., 536 F.2d 231, 234 n.2 (8th Cir. 1976); Hamilton v. Miller, 477 F.2d 908, 909–10 n.1 (10th Cir. 1973); Zuch v. Hussey, 394 F. Supp. 1028, 1050–51 (E.D. Mich. 1975), aff'd, 547 F.2d 1168 (6th Cir. 1977). Testing has been recognized as a protected activity. Education-Instruction, Inc. v. Copley Management and Development Corp., 3 Equal Opportunity in Hous. Cases. §15,453 (D. Mass. 1982); Northside Realty Assocs. v. Chapman, 411 F. Supp. 1195 (N.D. Ga. 1976); United States v. State of Wisconsin, 395 F. Supp. 732 (W.D. Wis. 1975).

[2] Auditing is testing done to detect patterns of discrimination without waiting for a victim to complain about it. A test that detects discrimination can provide the basis for a lawsuit, since determine whether there is supporting evidence necessary for legal enforcement proceedings.

- Assistance to victims of housing discrimination in pursuing legal action

The assistance can take various forms: a candid evaluation of the merits of the case, advice on whether to file an administrative complaint or sue, help in getting a lawyer, factfinding, and moral support throughout the course of the legal proceedings.

- Filing lawsuits as an organization or on behalf of victims of housing discrimination

As a result of the 1982 Havens Realty Corp. decision,[3] fair housing groups as organizations have standing to sue on their own behalf, at least when they can claim injury because of various discriminatory practices, such as racial steering. Often, these groups join as coplaintiffs with persons alleging housing discrimination.

- Community education and outreach programs

These activities take many forms. Most groups publish a newsletter. Although many are devoted to local and national fair housing issues, others deal with a broader range of community problems, with fair housing only one of many issues.

Groups often meet with community leaders, sometimes to let them know of problems that need to be addressed, other times simply to keep them informed. They conduct fair housing training programs addressed to different audiences. They also train volunteers to do testing. Further, they educate members of the real estate industry about how to do business in a nondiscriminatory manner. In addition, fair housing groups assist lawyers in learning the necessary rudiments of housing discrimination investigation to equip them to initiate fair housing lawsuits.

Many groups also carry out extensive publicity campaigns, informing the public of their rights, as well as keeping them aware of continuing problems. Groups monitor local, State, and regional government activities, and speak out about the potential effect on housing.

For some groups, fair housing is one of several issues to be addressed by a comprehensive housing program that seeks to help persons with all their housing problems—landlord-tenant relationships, condominium conversions, home purchase, mortgage default avoidance, etc.

This directory also includes a separate section on Community Housing Resource Boards (CHRBs), funded by HUD. These CHRBs are limited in the kinds of fair housing services they can provide. For example, they may not engage in or even support testing. Nor are they permitted to undertake or participate in fair housing enforcement activity. CHRBs, nonetheless, often provide useful and significant fair housing services and are, accordingly, included in a separate section.

The directory is based on a questionnaire and followup telephone calls. Of the groups contacted, only those that provide some significant fair housing service are listed.

No attempt has been made to evaluate the effectiveness of the groups or their activities. The purpose of the directory is to inform the public of the private fair housing assistance resources that exist in communities and metropolitan areas across the country and what these organizations can and cannot do when fair housing problems arise.

2. Growth of the Private Fair Housing Movement

The origin of the private fair housing movement can be traced with some precision. It began with a court case that resulted in a judicial defeat for proponents of fair housing. The case involved a white-only project to house 25,000 people in New York City called Stuyvesant Town. Developed by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company with substantial State assistance, it was completed in 1947. A major court challenge to the white-only policy of Stuyvesant Town proceeded through the New York State courts and was rejected by the State's highest court in 1949. In 1950 the Supreme Court of the United States declined to review the decision, rendering it final.[1]

The project and the case were matters of great local controversy throughout the course of the litigation. In 1948, while the case was still pending, a local fair housing group was formed, the New York State Committee on Discrimination in Housing.[2] This committee, consisting of some 20 local and nationally affiliated civil rights, civil liberties, religious, and labor organizations, was organized to deal, not just with the Stuyvesant Town case, but with the overall problem of housing discrimination in New York that the case had highlighted.[3]

The committee turned its attention to legislation and, among other things, was instrumental in securing enactment of New York City and

The organizations were: American Association of University Women, New York State Division; American Civil Liberties Union; American Jewish Committee, New York chapter; American Jewish Congress; American Veterans Committee; Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith; Board of Home Missions, Congregational-Christian Churches; Citizens Housing and Planning Council of New York, Inc.; Citizens Union; Commission on Christian Social Relations of the Episcopal Diocese of New York; Human Relations Commission of the Protestant Council of New York; Intergroup Relations Committee, New York Ethical Society; Jewish Labor Committee; Jewish War Veterans; National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; National Conference of Christians and Jews, New York area; New York State Industrial Union Council (CIO); United Neighborhood Houses of New York, Inc.; Urban League of Greater New York; and Women's City Club of New York.

New York State laws banning housing discrimination in any future such developments. It also sparked the beginnings of a national movement of local fair housing groups whose objective is to assure that all persons have a genuine choice of where to live.[4]

The committee soon found that there was a nationwide demand for information and assistance on housing bias.[5] One major focus of attention was on racially restrictive covenants, which the U.S. Supreme Court had ruled judicially unenforceable in Shelley v. Kraemer.[6] Concern was also growing about the direct assistance to housing segregation provided by various Federal housing agencies and programs and the probability of even more assistance under the broader Federal programs adopted in 1949.[7]

At a public meeting called by the New York Committee in December 1949, the Solicitor General of the United States, Philip D. Perlman, speaking for President Truman, announced issuance of new Federal regulations barring FHA and VA mortgage insurance and guarantees for housing covered by restrictive covenants executed after the regulations went into effect. These regulations, limited as they were, gave national publicity to the New York Committee and evoked a nationwide response which made it clear that a larger operation was necessary.

As a result, in 1950, 11 of the founders of the New York Committee founded the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing (NCDH).[8] NCDH primarily served an educational role: as a nationwide source of technical information on housing markets and discrimination, as a monitor of Federal activities, as a national forum for local problems and developments, and as a conduit for information exchange among newly established local groups throughout the United States.

Over the next 15 years the private fair housing movement grew gradually, but with increasing acceleration. In 1960 there were 18 identifiable local groups. By 1963 there were 250. By 1965 there were at least 1,000.[9]

These were grassroots citizens organizations consisting of persons determined to do something about housing discrimination in their neighborhood, town, city, or State. They were generally volunteers, unequipped with staff or other resources.

Within those restrictions, however, local fair housing groups in the late 1950s and early 1960s sought to address directly the problem of discriminatory attitudes through public meetings, speak-outs, neighborhood discussion groups, and private conferences with local government officials. These meetings, discussions, and conferences served to bring fair housing issues out into the open, and provided a means of disseminating factual information to counter widely held negative stereotypes about the supposed adverse economic and social effects of housing integration.[10]

One particularly popular educational and organizing action was a "good neighbor pledge" campaign. In such a campaign, the organizers solicited signatures of people who publicly agreed to welcome any responsible person as a neighbor, regardless of race or creed.

"Pledge" campaigns generally served as organizing tools for groups by generating publicity, attracting volunteers, and bringing out supporters who could be called upon when needed. Once organized, fair housing groups then moved on to the more difficult and practical problem of helping minorities find housing in areas previously closed to them.

Many groups set up listing services and solicited names of people willing to sell or rent property to minorities. Escorts were provided to families who wanted to look at property in all-white neighborhoods. For example, in San Jose, California, an informal committee of church and civic group members, plus other concerned citizens, joined together for this purpose. They first analyzed the local housing market, considering the demand for and cost of particular types of housing units and the availability of such units. With the help of advertising, news stories, and word of mouth, they created a file of names and information about minority families looking for housing. Persons willing to sell or rent to minorities were found through personal contact and by systematic telephone calls to inquire about the availability to minorities of units advertised in the newspaper. They succeeded in finding cooperative real estate brokers, as well as sources of financing for buyers.[11]

The San Jose group also kept an eye on neighborhood tensions and arranged parties to introduce the newcomers to their neighbors. At the same time, a public educational campaign was carried on to increase the number of concerned and friendly citizens. The net result was that in 24 months, 40 families—39 black and 1 Asian—were helped to move into previously all-white areas.[12]

After "integration moves" were actually made, fair housing groups helped to ensure that police protection would be provided. Such protection was crucial, since the first minorities to move into a neighborhood were often greeted by telephone threats, cross burnings, rock and debris throwing, angry mobs, bombs, and other violence and intimidation.[13] Rapid response by community leaders made all the difference in whether the incidents dissipated or continued.[14]

Beginning in the 1970s, fair housing groups became increasingly sophisticated and knowledgeable. Above all, many became financially established and professionally staffed. Since then, they have broadened their perspective to include the effect of Federal aid programs on the local supply of housing for lower income people, particularly minorities. Groups have taken an increasingly broad view of access to housing. They now deal with such problems as discrimination against families with children, as well as the general need for education about housing rights and responsibilities among all consumers.

The key to such comprehensive, long-range programs has been funding. Although fair housing groups continue to rely heavily on volunteers, the ability to raise money has meant being able to have offices open to the public and professional staff whose first priority is the group's work.

Funds come from any of several sources—foundation grants, payments for services, religious groups, corporations, and special events. But the largest source has been the community development block grant (CDBG) program.

Enacted as Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974,[15] this Federal program replaced earlier urban development programs. Local governments were given significantly greater control over design and execution, and funds were distributed by formula.[16] From the outset, however, one of the restrictions on the grant has been the requirement that grantees affirmatively further fair housing.[17]

To fulfill this requirement, many communities have contracted with local fair housing centers to provide assistance to victims of housing discrimination, as well as other fair housing services.

4. Community Housing Resource Boards

Another private resource on fair housing is the various Community Housing Resource Boards (CHRBs) funded by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).[1] These CHRBs, established through housing industry voluntary affirmative marketing agreements (VAMAs) have limited powers, none of which has to do with enforcement. Rather, CHRBs are a mechanism for communication and cooperation between the housing and home finance industry and the various public and private fair housing organizations in the community. The boards also provide needed educational and informational material to inform the housing and home finance industry and the public of the rights guaranteed under the Federal fair housing law.[2]

HUD and the National Association of Realtors approved the agreements program in December 1975 to promote nondiscriminatory marketing of housing. Specific agreements are signed by local boards of realtors and are implemented at the local level.[3]

HUD has entered into agreements with the National Association of Realtors, the National Association of Real Estate Brokers, and the National Association of Home Builders. Signatories agree to undertake various activities to inform communities about equal housing opportunity, to assure equal provision of professional services, and to publish their commitment to fair housing.[4]

The VAMAs require HUD to give technical assistance to local housing industry groups that sign the agreements. This aid is provided through the

[1] 41 Fed. Reg. 43,221 (1976). HUD is authorized to create Community Housing Resource Boards "pursuant to section 809 of Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, as amended, 42 U.S.C. §3609, which calls for the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development 'to work out programs of voluntary compliance and enforcement' with the advice of 'persons in the housing industry and other interested parties'." Id. at 43,222. See also Civil Rights—Riots—Fair Housing—Civil Disobedience Act, Pub. L. 90-284, Title VIII, §809, 82 Stat. 85 (1968) (codified as amended at 42 U.S.C. §3609 (1982).

CHRBs, whose members are from community and fair housing organizations and from the housing and real estate industries. In general terms, the CHRBs are charged with fostering communications between local housing industry groups and groups representing minorities and women, to serve as advisor and resource to the local housing industry, to forward community knowledge of the VAMA, and to take part in evaluations of the VAMA.[5] In more specific terms, CHRB activities described by HUD are:

1. Persuade real estate editors of the metropolitan majority and minority press to run articles periodically on the existence of the agreement and the role of the CHRB. (Enclose a photograph of CHRB members.)
2. Persuade local housing industry groups to carry informative material in their journals and newsletters on the agreement.
3. Seek air time on community television and radio talk shows.
4. Observe National Fair Housing Month (April) with a special event in the community. Possibly coordinate your event with the local HUD office observance.
5. Seek community development block grant funds through your local government to support CHRB administrative needs.
6. Observe the anniversary of the signing of the agreement or development of the CHRB.
7. Prepare a proposal to seek foundation support for the CHRB.
8. Maintain an updated supply of HUD publications on fair housing and HUD housing programs in general. Make the information available to the public.
9. Become a knowledgeable fair housing referral source.
10. Seek the assistance of a local college or university in developing a homeseekers' guide for minority families.
11. Construct a fair housing ordinance for the community and present it to community officials.
12. Review the land use and zoning practices of the community to determine if they perpetuate discriminatory housing patterns.
13. Develop and/or implement a program to maintain free housing choice in the community.
14. Lead discussions on fair housing problems and issues at community meetings.
15. Construct open housing curriculum for use in appropriate high school classes.
16. Contact corporations to encourage involvement in open housing affairs.
17. Prepare evaluation reports of community fair housing services.

[5] See, e.g., 24 C.F.R. §120.10 (1982).

18. Provide community officials with a set of recommendations for improved fair housing conditions.
19. Develop brochures on the purpose of the CHRB and composition of its membership.
20. Maintain a supply of fair housing posters and encourage local businesses to display them.[6]
